Insight/What Drives Them

Life/Culture: “There’s always a better way”

On the treadmill of life we’re inundated with millions of “shoulds” for how to optimize time, where to focus energy, the latest tricks to manage health, the best way to budget, and on and on. The “noise” comes from so many angles, it’s hard to filter through what really matters, let alone what is possible in the daily grind—so the default is to ignore it all, keep your head down and just keep moving along.

Consumer Insight: “Variety is vitality”

Between their job, family, and a constant list of responsibilities, a break feels completely out of reach. To survive the chaos, they end up mindlessly going through the daily motions like scrolling through social media—oblivious to the present moment, and blind to the joy of spontaneous discovery. While they can’t overhaul their whole schedule, they refuse to stay stuck in autopilot and intentionally work in small, easy improvements, finding that even the littlest of deviations help them feel more joyful and alive.

“NAME”

49M US Adults (18+)

People who don’t do anything by halves—work, family, life.

Spontaneous:

Big changes risk throwing off the rhythm, but intentional micro variations that easily fit into their day are not just fun, but necessary to keep them feeling balanced.

Striving:

Future-focused and ambitious, they often forget to take a moment to enjoy all they’ve already achieved.

Busy:

Their mind is always running through a constantly updating and evolving list of responsibilities, so they just try to make the best decision for this season

Belief/What They Think

Category/For:

A micro-pause with zero penalty

Juice doesn’t need to be a complicated health rule to track or a guilty pleasure to pay for later—life is too busy to overthink every drink. The best choices are those that break up the routine without creating more stress. Pouring a glass of Zero Sugar gives you a quick, low-stakes victory and keeps the balance.

Brand Belief

Minute Maid stands out by keeping things bright, upbeat, and colorful. We bring reliable, easygoing energy to the everyday—no drama, no mental math, just pure, good, full-flavored enjoyment.

Brand Challenge

Too much choice can be inundating, so Minute Maid Zero Sugar must keep it simple enough to be able to squeeze through the noise in their head, in their life, and in their store without adding to the overwhelm.
